Richard Holmes : War Walks: From Agincourt to Normandy v. 1 before purchasing it in order to gage whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised War Walks: From Agincourt to Normandy v. 1:

He may be considered a "popular" historian, but he was much more. I was deeply saddened when his life was cut short by cancer. He brought the time and place of Military History alive. That may sound a cliché, but altogether true here. Richard Holmes sense of history put you into the perspective of the battle at the soldier's and cavalry level. He takes you from place to place, as if in real time and you get the sense of what it was like before, during and in the aftermath of the battle and the war. He was also a horseman.

That adds an even more interesting and personal dimension to his works. Fortunately he was prolific and his works are alive. This series of "War Walks," books 1-2, take you to the ground level geography of the famous battles over the last 900 years, starting, appropriately enough, with the Battle of Hastings. There are few better Military Histories.

For hundreds of years battle has raged over the area of northern France and Belgium known as "the fatal avenue". This book guides readers on a journey through the terrain as it is today, seeking to recreate on each walk the atmosphere of the battles through the stories of the men who fought them. Each chapter is illustrated with a map of the battlefield area, and several sketch maps showing troop movements and local points of interest. The battlefields covered are those of Agincourt (1415), Waterloo (1815), Mons and Le Cateau (1914), the Somme (1916), Arras (1940) and Operation Goodwood (1944).
